THE MOTHER OF PARLIAMENTS

BY SIR HENRY LUCY Property to The Christian Science Monitor LONDON, England (Feb. 27)-When at the general election Mr. Lloyd George introduced into British politics the novelty of distributing to candidates certificates recommending them to the good will of constituencies, maneuver resulting in the creation of a ministerial majority unparalleled in numerical strength, it seemed reaonable to anticipate prevalent doy in the House of Commons. Ministers have thus early had rude wakening from this pleasant dream. On the first two measures submitted to he House they have been compelled. n face of opposition not less effective because it was not organized, to capitulate upon important issues in order to avoid defeat.

Ministers Then and Now

In respect of one measure dealing with the reelection of members acceptng ministerial office, the check was ore serious by reason of the soundness of their proposal. According to a statute going back to the reign of Queen Anne, members accepting ofices of profit under the Crown are required forthwith to resign their eats and appeal to their constituents for approval of their action. This ndition, designed to defeat possible collusion detrimental to the public service, was highly desirable 200 years ago, when, like Jackey of Norfolk, members of the House of Commons were "bought and sold." Today, when ministerial appointments are sharply criticised, the most reckless controversialist does not suggest that peronal bribes play any part in the election of ministers. In these circumstances, operation of the statute is an anachronism qually inconvenient and superfluous. hat, save for suspicion of secret fraud, a man returned triumphantly at he head of the poll should, on acceptance of office, be compelled to subit himself to repetition of the ordeal manifestly indefensible under any cially after a general election, it is had been said in debate." ormed government were compelled to phrase, begin to feel their feet? through the farce of reelection. FUTURE OF GERMAN PACIFIC COLONIES

The Hon. G. S. Beeby, Australian Statesman, Says They Must Be Used as Colonies Not for Strategic Purposes

pecial to The Christian Science Monitor LONDON, England-The future of he German possessions in the Pacific s being debated at great length in London, Paris, and Australia. A representative of The Christian Science Monitor, therefore, called on the Hon. G. S. Beeby immediately on his arrival in London, as already mentioned in a cable to The Christian Science Monitor, to learn his views. As a Minister n the New South Wales Government, Mr. Beeby is in an excellent position o speak. He has a fine public record to his credit

Mr. Beeby was educated in New South Wales. After following various occupations, he settled down in early manhood to journalism. He was called o the bar in New South Wales, and entered its Parliament in 1906 as a Labor representative. He was a memer of the first Labor government. holding office as Minister for Educaion and Labor, but resigned and left the Labor Party in 1912, on account of the new policy adopted by the Labor organization, namely, that ministers were to be controlled by the organizaon instead of by the members in the House. He then stood again as a Procressive, which small party he led for few years. The loyal wing of the abor Party, the old Liberals, and the Progressives, formed a coalition govrnment in 1916, and Mr. Beeby joined as Minister for Labor and Industry.

As Minister for Education, he established the conation school system in New South Wales, and introduced wide reform in niversity education. For a short period he was a lecturer at the Sydney liversity on economic subjects.

He was sent to the United States as ember of the government to survey post-war industrial problems. He deded to come to London for a few eks to study the development of the Whitley scheme of industrial adjust-Mr. Beeby is imbued with at society can develop best on lines! individualism rather than on those of state socialism, and that social progress depends more on education nan on artificial expedients.

They must be utlets for the congested populations of the older nations, and never again se occupied merely for strategic purposes or as bases for military and naval operations. Given an absolute of colonization which would cement! emocratic countries into a League of Cations formed for the purpose of preenting further wars.

The Pacific islands," Mr. Beeby ontinued, "were undoubtedly a menace to Australia before the war. Many ears ago Britain had opportunities of annexing the whole of them, as they were not coveted by other nations. But Germany suddenly began to look o the Pacific for colonies, and, as the result of a friendly agreement with Great Britain, and later on with the added territory. The so-called man-rating a Council of Seafarers. United States, acquired the Caroline and Marshall islands and portions of New Guinea and the Samoan group. At that time, however, it was assumed hat Germany, would occupy the slands as colonies and would develop eir resources, but time soon showed hat this Teutonic invesion of the East was part of the general scheme for world power. The Pacific possessions were converted into formidable naval ases, and very little genuine colonization or development was undertaken. IN THE LIBRARIES

Whether a public library should devote the major part of its energies tovard satisfying the general demand for light and entertaining fiction, or hould endeavor to provide mental pabulum of a more elevating nature, a question that has been brought nto prominence in Vancouver, British imbia, recently. Three members f the library board have presented an exhaustive report which is, in effect, sweeping condemnation of the purhasing system in vogue in nearly every public library in the United States and Canada - a system which, experienced librarians declare, cannot radically changed without impairng the usefulness of the book lending

The report asserts that the reference department is woefully inadequate to meet the calls necessarily de upon it by a city of over 100,000, that there is a lack of solid reading matter, that the classification leaves nuch to be desired. A recommendaion is made that the buying of fiction be cut down to a minimum until the other departments have been brought ip to the desired standard. For its funds, the library is entirely dependent pon civic grants, which of late years have been comparatively small, and if recommendation is to have force, practically no fiction can be bought for the .xt three or four years.

The committee points out that the helves are stocked with the uninoiring fiction of mediocre authors while the technical and sociological departments offer works that in many ases are decidedly out of date, and hat, therefore, the library is unable o serve its highest purpose. To which the librarian makes answer hat 70 per cent of the patrons demand ght fiction, and that the needs of the jority must be considered. In Great Britain, he points out, librarians estimate that 52 per cent of their patrons call for fiction, but the perentage is greater on this side of the HAMILTON, Ontario-The campaign conducted in this city by Sir Adam Beck, chairman of the Ontario Hydro Commission, and his associates in connection with hydro-radial by-law resulted in a great victory, the vote yielding a majority of nearly 3000 in favor of the project. This outcome is specially significant, as strong private interests and every newspaper in the city arraigned themselves against the by-law and instituted a vigorous campaign of hostility against it.

Speaking of his triumph, Sir Adam said it was not his fight, but the fight of the people themselves, and their victory was but another victory for the plan of public ownership of big public utilities, and an expression of confidence in the success of the whole

Thomas Carlyle to His Sister

5 Cheyne Row, Chelsea, London, July 6, 1834.

My dear Jean,-Your Letter, which was the first I had received from any of my Friends in Scotland, proved one of the welcomest I ever got. The Postman's two knocks (for all Postmen give two smart thumps which are known here and elsewhere as the "Postman's knock") brought me it and the newspaper, and delivered me from a multiide of vague imaginations. Newspapers indeed had come the week before, and persuaded me that nothing naterial was wrong; however, it was still the best that could happen to have it all confirmed in black-on-white. Tell James that in spite of his critical penetration, the Letter "could o," and did go, and was welcomed as

Mr. Balfour on Zionism

The able statement made by Mr. Balfour, the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on the question of Zionism, in the course of an introduction which he has written to Mr. Hahum Sokolow's "History of Zionism," will be read with something more than interest by all who desire to see the establishment of every wise step toward a settlement of the Jewish question. Mr. Balfour, in company with all those who have really studied the issue, is very far from declaring that Zionism will settle the Jewish question, but he is quite confident that it will tend to promote that mutual sympathy and comprehension which, as he justly insists, is the only sure basis of tolera-

There is no doubt, of course, of Mr. Balfour's sympathy for the movement. It was he who, shortly before General Allenby and his forces entered Jerusalem, issued that famous statement on behalf of the British Government which Zionists everywhere regard as a kind of charter, in which the British Foreign Minister declared that the government "favored the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people.' Mr. Balfour does not close his eves to difficulties, "Doubtless there are difficulties," he declares in his introduction to Mr. Sokolow's book. "Doubtless there are objections—great difficulties, very real objections." But he proceeds to show how the manifest advantages far outweigh all these difficulties. It is not merely, as he puts it, that large numbers would through Zionism find a refuge from religious and social persecution; but that they would bear corporate responsibilities and enjoy corporate opportunities of a kind which, from the nature of the case, they can never possess as citizens of any non-

Mr. Balfour then goes on to deal with the charge, often made against the Jews, that in the countries where they are scattered they tend to exploit for personal ends a civilization which they have not created in communities which they do little to maintain. Mr. Balfour insists that such charges are manifestly false, and then, with his accustomed incisiveness, proceeds to point out that if the loyalty of the Jew to the country of his adoption is sometimes feeble, compared to his loyalty to his race and religion, the majority of countries have only themselves to thank for it. They have consistently denied to the Jews the full rights of citizenship, or any rights of citizenship at all, and subjected them to all manner of hardships and indignities. "If you treat an important section of the community as outcasts," Mr. Balfour says, "they will hardly shine as patriots. The Jews, in fact, throughout the centuries have been treated as no other people have been treated. They have been always outside the pale of the normal, as far as the other peoples were concerned, and it is largely because it represents a return to normal conditions that Mr. Balfour pecially welcomes Zionism. Mr. Balfour, in fact, fully recognizes what has escaped many, that the abnormality in the position of the Jew in all lands as "a man without a country" affects, often where least not only the attitude of society toward him, but his attitude toward society. Thus, in the early part of his introduction, Mr. Balfour does something more than hint that it is amongst the Jews themselves that the difficulties in realizing Zionism and also the objections to the policy are most acutely felt. Now the foremost objection of many Jews to Zionism, namely, that it will, if achieved, create a kind of moral compulsion upon them amongst the nations to return to Palestine, is, indeed, directly traceable to the Jews' present abnormal status. "They fear," Mr. Balfour declares, "that it will adversely affect their position in the country of their adoption. The great majority of them have no desire to settle in Palestine. Even supposing a Zionist community were established, they would not join it. But they seem to think, if I understand them rightly, that so soon as such a community came into being, men of Jewish blood, still more, men of Jewish religion, would be regarded by unkindly critics as out of place elsewhere. Their ancient home having been restored to them, they would be expected to reside there."

Mr. Balfour, however, is firmly convinced that such iears are quite unfounded. He does not deny that in some countries, where legal equality is firmly established, Jews may still be regarded with a certain measure of prejudice, but this prejudice, he is convinced, would not be due to Zionism, neither would Zionism embitter it. "The tendency," he adds, "should, surely, be all the other way. Everything which assimilates the national and international status of the Jews to that of other races ought to mitigate what remains of ancient antipathies; and evidently this assimilation would be promoted by giving them that which all other nations possess: a local habitation and a local home." This is, perhaps, the most important espect of the whole question, an aspect which has been largely ignored, but which a genuine thinker like Mr. Balfour might be trusted to see and to emphasize.

Army Posts and Flying Fields

It will readily be recalled by the newspaper-reading public of the United States that, in the latter part of the Taft Administration and in the early part of President Wilson's first term, the expediency of abolishing a number of the then existing army posts and naval stations was seriously considered by the heads of the War and Navy departments, by the White House, and by members of the House and the Senate. At that time the drift-of American public opinion was entirely away from war, and militarism was at its lowest ebb in the esteem of the Nation. Only one concession was made to what little there was manifest of an opposing sentiment, namely, that the navy should be maintained at creditable strength, but for the purpose principally of protecting the coasts and assisting in the policing of the oceans. It seems at this moment incredible that confidence in the permanence of the peace, then apparently complete, could at that time have been so deep seated. But such was the case, and, except for local protests, proposals looking to the abandonment of long-established military posts, naval stations, and navy yards, were received with the greatest complaisance by the public. Since then there has been a complete change in the situation, and it is evident that, even with a League of Nations made a reality, there will long remain a national disposition to be, in a measure at least, prepared more thoroughly than formerly for emergencies.

Thus there now comes the announcement that the War Department has decided to proceed with the purchase of the sites of fifteen army camps and thirteen balloon and flying fields, a transaction in which an initial expenditure of $15,000,000 will be involved. With the consummation of these purchases the army will have thirty training camps, including the original sixteen cantonments constructed for the training of the national army, and nineteen aviation centers, most of which will be in the southeastern states. The new fields to be retained in the North will be regarded as summer flying centers only. The $15,000,000 mentioned is, of course. only a fraction of the total cost. Approximately $280,-000,000 has been spent on the cantonments that will soon be in the government's sole possession. This statement includes the camps to be purchased and those already owned. Most of these cantonments are filled with men. now, but with men in the course of demobilization. With a regular standing army of, say, 200,000 men, most of these places will be empty within a year or two after peace shall have been signed. The cost of maintenance of unused army posts will be immense. The great majority of them, it is fair to say, will constitute burdens rather than assets, except as they may be employed by the several states for a few weeks annually in the training of the national guard, and except as they may be used as public pleasure grounds. Unless the United States is to become a military nation, it will seem to many thoughtful people that the purchase and maintenance of cantonments likely to be of little use in a peaceable world, which the world seems bound to be when fleeting disturbances due to the war become settled, are extravagances which the Nation at this time can ill afford.

It is another matter altogether with regard to the flying fields. The government can make good use of these for peace purposes. Military training in flying will be helpful to civilian aviation. Next to aviation training fields, the great need of the hour in this direction is the establishment of landing fields throughout the country. Some of the millions of dollars which it is proposed to put into cantonments would be better employed, one would think, in aiding local and state governments to prepare adequately for the great development in commercial and private aviation which is at hand

Housing in Canada

THE memorandum issued, recently, by the Hon. N. W. Rowell, president of the Privy Council, and chairman of the Canadian Cabinet Committee on Housing, dealing with the government's loan for building purposes, marks another satisfactory step toward the solution of the housing question in the Dominion. The Dominion Government, it will be remembered, some months ago created a fund of $25,000,000 to be used by way of loans to the several provincial governments of Canada in connection with the municipal or other programs for better housing. The memorandum just issued by Mr. Rowell explains the conditions upon which these loans are to be made. and it is welcome to find that these conditions are as simple as they could well be made, consistently with the safeguarding of the interests of the federation as a whole. Thus, each province is required to submit to the federal government a general housing scheme which shall include such matters as minimum standards, provision of open spaces, lighting, heating, and so on. As regards price, each province is entitled to fix its own maximum, only the provincial maximum must not exceed the federal maximum. The money may be advanced for building houses on sites owned by the provincial government, municipalities, housing societies, or companies comprising groups of citizens or owners of lots for the purpose of erecting houses for their own occupancy. The loan is to be repayable by the provinces over a period of twenty years, at 5 per cent.

One of the most important points dealt with in the memorandum, however, is undoubtedly the question of the acquisition of sites. Everybody knows, who has, to any extent, gone into the housing question, how much the price of land enters into the ultimate cost of building. As a well-known authority on the subject pointed out, recently, it is impossible to solve the housing question completely until some stable basis of land value is reached, "whereby the capital value has a definite relation to the revenue value and there is less exploitation of community expenditure on improvements." Land, in. other words, cannot be bought at "boom" prices, and houses be built upon it at a possible rental, if the houses are to come up to accepted standards and the rent to be paid is to represent a just return on capital expenditure. In these circumstances, it is very satisfactory to find the Cabinet Committee on Housing declaring, as it does, that the success of the housing movement depends upon the acquirement of suitable land at its fair value and at a cost which working men can afford to pay. "It is essential, therefore," the memorandum adds, "that statutory provision shall be made by the provinces for a cheap and speedy method of compulsory taking of land required for housing purposes.'

As a matter of fact, of course, all this ought to have been done long ago; but, since it was not done long ago, there is every need that it should be done at once. The housing question is one of the most urgent questions of the day, if not the most urgent question, and all who have anything to do with the issue should understand this, or be made to understand it. "We need have no fear of Bolshevism," declared the Duke of Devonshire at Quebec, the other day, "if we let plenty of sunlight into the slums of our great cities." Such a general statement may have all the faults of its virtues, but it comes nearer to the truth than most general statements of a like nature.

Joint Industrial Councils

It is particularly welcome to find, from the latest reports on the subject, that the Whitley Joint Industrial Boards, recently set up in Great Britain for the purpose of bringing about a closer union between Capital and Labor, are steadily achieving their object, and are daily affording evidence of their value. These boards, which have been promoted by the Ministry of Labor and the Ministry of Reconstruction, are of three different kinds; namely, the National Joint Industrial Councils, the Trade Boards, which are under the Ministry of Labor, and the Interim Industrial Reconstruction Committees. The Joint Industrial Councils are applicable only to those trades and industries which are well organized on both sides, that is to say, both on the side of the employer and on that of the employed, and there are already twenty-four such councils organized and at work throughout the country.

Conceived on broad and comprehensive lines, they aim at securing the largest possible amount of joint action between the employer and the worker for the development of industry as a part of the national life; for the betterment of all engaged in industry; and for the establishment of machinery for the settlement of differences. On the educational side their great aim is the "pooling of information," and cooperation with the various education authorities in arranging educational courses in different branches of industry. The whole scheme is, of course, educational in character, and where its good results are already most noticeable is, as might be expected, in the lessening of distrust.

expected, in the lessening of distrust. Those who have made any study of Labor matters, not a purely theoretical study from books and reviews, but a practical study amongst the men and employers themselves amidst their working conditions, are well aware how, almost invariably, what lies at the root of all differences is distrust. Nothing, apparently, can convince the average employer of the old school that the working man is capable of anything else but "work"; whilst nothing, it seems, can convince the average employee of the old school that being an employer is not simply a matter of standing round and seeing other people work. Such convictions exist, of course, in all degrees of intensity, and this intensity lessens almost in exact proportion as employer and employee come together, and each learns something of how the other lives. This is exactly the effect of the Joint Industrial Councils wherever they have been organized. As a recent statement on the matter records, these councils are bringing about "a considerable difference of outlook between the two sides, and there is,' it adds, "a general tendency to view each other with less suspicion. Employers are getting a closer view of the workers' standpoint, and, at the same time, employees are getting an insight into the problems of management which they had never previously had, and could not have had under the old state of affairs." It is along such lines, surely, that the final solution of this age-long problem must ultimately come.

The Homes of James G. Blaine

It was announced from Augusta, Maine, a few days Secretary of State of the United States, and a member of Congress for twenty years, had been deeded to the State by his daughter, Mrs. Harriet Blaine Beale. The gift was made in honor of her son, Lieut. Walker Blaine Beale, who fell in the St. Mihiel drive. It is the understanding that the State of Maine will make use of this historic dwelling as an executive mansion, Augusta being the state capital. The man who owned this house, and who occupied it for many years in those intervals when he could escape to Augusta, was known everywhere in the country, for more than a quarter of a century, as "Blaine of Maine," although he was a native of Pennsylvania. After he had graduated from Washington College, Pennsylvania; had taught in the Western Military Institute, at Blue Lick Springs, in Kentucky; had studied law: had taught in Philadelphia; had met with several ups and downs had married a young lady from Maine, become a newspaper editor and proprietor in that State, and grown so famous in politics that his name was a household word in the land, he visited his first home, back in the Blaine and Gillespie region of Pennsylvania, where he surprised numbers of people by recalling them as his childhood playmates and friends.

Socially, however, it was a far cry from the humble home of his parents to the mansion in Augusta, and a farther cry still to one of his mansions in Washington, or to his cottage at Bar Harbor. In his time, Mr. Blaine had several homes at the national capital. One was a modest three-story residence on Fifteenth Street, another was the castle-like structure on Dupont Circle; then there was an elegant dwelling on Lafayette Square, and the big, rambling structure at 17 Madison Place. The latter had a past. It had been a private dwelling, a boarding house, a shelter for government offices, and twice the home of a premier member of the national Cabinet. History records that the third floor, under the slanting roof, was once occupied by President Polk, for four months, while the White House was undergoing repairs. Something more than passing interest attached to it in Blaine's time, from the fact that it was here that Secretary Seward was attacked on the night of the assassination of President Lincoln. It was in this house that Mr. Blaine, when Secretary of State, established himself, in Harrison's time. Art had then contributed greatly toward beautifying the residence. During the Secretary's term of office it was one of the most attractive social centers of the capital. Mr. Blaine had always been a favorite with the diplomatic corps, and here its members were frequently entertained, individually and unofficially. In summer, for many years, Mr. Blaine "lived on his porch" at Bar Harbor, Maine. That is to say, during the greater part of his time in Bar Harbor he might be found reading on an extensive veranda that overlooked the ocean. This gallery almost surrounded a house built primarily with the purpose of affording comfort to its inmates and opportunity to enjoy the scenery for miles around. The statesman at leisure, seated on this veranda, was fond of telling his visitors that at one time he might have bought the whole island for "a song."

While James Gillespie Blaine was in Congress, while he was Speaker of the House of Representatives, while he was Secretary of State under Garfield and under Harrison, while he was fighting for his political existence in the Credit Mobilier affair, while he was struggling for precedence in the Republican Party against Roscoe Conkling, while he was making his campaigns for the presidency, in his own behalf or in behalf of others, "spellbinding" enemies and friends alike with his eloquence, his real home, and the home of his family, was "the large, old-fashioned, broad-fronted white house, with its green blinds, its maples and its grassy yard, which stands on a quiet, shady street near the state capitol, in Augusta, Maine." Here, when wishing to be rid of the hurly-burly, and when seeking the tranquillity and neighborliness of a typical New England town, Mr. Blaine and his family would assemble periodically and renew old acquaintances and friendships. This is the home that has been deeded to the State that, through thick and thin, was loyal to its adopted son.

Notes and Comments

CHICAGO will be only one of many cities in the United States to extend cordial greeting to the new mission of thirty Mexicans appointed by President Carranza of Mexico to bring about friendly commercial relations with the United States. All they want to know is that President Carranza really means this. If he does, this mission can be very useful to both countries. It will do no harm, at any rate, wisely to take him at his word.

Books setting forth the argument that Shakespeare did not write either his plays or his sonnets have never, however eloquent, however sincere, met with an encouraging welcome. They have been regarded dispassionately, perhaps the more appropriate word is compassionately, as one regards any harmless and diligent eccentricity, and have thereafter been incontinently dismissed. Despite all their efforts, and they have been many, the world, erudite or otherwise, has continued serenely on its way, without the feeling that so much as a stone in the Shakespeare edifice was thereby loosened.

Now an intrepid Frenchman, and even Voltaire, who took astounding liberties with Shakespeare, did not venture so far as this, has dared to write a book with a view to proving that the bard of Avon was no bard at all. Professor Abel Lefranc is of opinion that the plays were written by the sixth Lord Derby, which certainly provides him with the opportunity of paying a graceful tribute to the present Earl Derby, British Ambassador in Paris, to whom the book is dedicated. This is, however, merely a side-issue in a campaign always carried forward by its Don Quixotes with tremendous momentum and concentration. In the present instance, the Stratford actor is dismissed as the playwright, in the course of two volumes, which, while they may fail to convince the reader, provide, nevertheless, much interesting reading, together with some astounding conclusions.

Well might men anywhere be proud of the testimonial of character which Bishop Rowe, of Alaska, gives the Indians with whom he has lived and worked. "I learned as much as I taught," said the bishop to a recent interviewer, speaking of his apprenticeship among the Lake Huron Chippewas before he went to Alaska. "I learned also to respect the Indian's code of honor. I have known Indians to be starving while camped where a white man had cached abundant food-supplies. I doubt if the thought of stealing the white man's supplies even occurred to them, for they know what it is to travel hard and far depending upon a cache of food, and what it would mean if some one had stolen it."

When the Michigan Senate passed a bill, with a referendum attached, empowering the Detroit Board of Education to take over the Detroit College of Medicine and conduct it as a part of the school system, something new in the way of public schools and medicine was projected. Having a college of medicine as a part of the public schools system may seem desirable to a certain class of individuals, but it would be a dangerous step in the direction of medical control.

It is gratifying to learn that the management of at least one large brewery, in Buffalo, New York, has come to realize that the elimination of the saloon will enable the people to buy and pay for more food. Those interested in this brewery have undertaken to convert the quarters occupied by their saloons into grocery stores, to be known as "thrift stores." They have already established fifteen, and it is reported that steps have been taken to set up fifteen more within the near future. That this plan is a wise one is amply borne out by the experiences of many communities that already enjoy the fruits of prohibition. A fact that should interest these former brewers in Buffalo is that their stores will prosper as a result of the thrift promoted by the extinction of an enterprise which they themselves have been most reluctant to abandon.

W. H. HAMMER, president of the foreign trade board of San Francisco, speaking before the New Orleans Association of Commerce, the other day, declared that the welfare of the entire country demanded "the breaking up of the combination that now forces nearly all of the export and import commerce of the United States through the port of New York." Would it not have been better if he had said something about the combination of daring enterprise and tireless energy that invites and attracts export and import commerce to the port of New York? What, may it be asked, are other ports in the United States doing to win business, comparable with what New York undertakes and carries through? What is the matter with the port of Boston, as an example?
